

A MESSAGE FROM CHICKEN HOUSE

I dream a lot – and sometimes it feels real. The Ice Garden is a novel trapped in that magical place between dreaming and waking. Jess finds the garden through a sense of longing – and lack of belonging – and soon she wishes she never had to leave. But what about the mysterious boy she encounters in this other world, and the strange darkness haunting the ice? Guy Jones tells a moving, dizzying tale – sometimes funny, sometimes sad. Brilliant and beautiful.

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'Barry Cunningham', with a stylized, flowing script.

BARRY CUNNINGHAM

Publisher

Chicken House

The ICE
Garden
GUY
JONES

Chicken
House

2 Palmer Street, Frome, Somerset BA11 1DS
www.chickenhousebooks.com

Text © Guy Jones 2018

First published in Great Britain in 2018

Chicken House
2 Palmer Street
Frome, Somerset BA11 1DS
United Kingdom
www.chickenhousebooks.com

Guy Jones has asserted his right under the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 to be identified as the author of this work.

All rights reserved.

No part of this publication may be reproduced or transmitted or utilized in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying or otherwise, without the prior permission of the publisher.

Cover and interior design by Helen Crawford-White
Typeset by Dorchester Typesetting Group Ltd
Printed and bound in Great Britain by CPI Group (UK) Ltd, Croydon CR0 4YY

The paper used in this Chicken House book is made from wood grown in sustainable forests.

1 3 5 7 9 10 8 6 4 2

British Library Cataloguing in Publication data available.

PB ISBN 978-1-911490-04-3
eISBN 978-1-911490-06-7

For Isabelle

They called it the Hat. It was a long white hood that masked the whole of Jess's face and neck, over which she wore something like ski goggles. The rest of her body was covered up with a baggy top, trousers and thick gloves so that no part of her skin was exposed to the sun.

'I don't like it here,' she said, lifting the goggles to get at a maddening itch on her nose.

'No one likes hospitals,' replied her mother.

'So, we can go?'

'You're in one of those moods, then.'

Jess sighed, releasing a mouthful of sickly air. The numbers on the lift display began ticking up towards the children's ward. Already, beads of sweat were forming on the back of her neck, sticking fabric to skin. Summer was the absolute worst time of year.

'It's only a couple of times a month,' said her mother.

'Only?' said Jess, her voice rising.

'Must we do this?'

Jess thought they probably must. At least until her mother understood how much she hated this building and everything in it.

The doors opened on the second floor to reveal a woman in a purple dress. She took a step towards them but stopped short at the sight of the Hat. Her mouth gaped like a fish but no words came out.

'Can we help?' asked Jess's mother.

'Oh . . .' she said, recovering herself a little. 'Up or down?'

'Going up.'

'Right. Well. Down for me. Thanks.' The woman took a step back, still staring.

'You can close your mouth now,' Jess said, as the lift doors closed.

'Darling, that was rude,' her mother scolded.

'She didn't hear me.'

'Shame.' They both smiled, without looking at one another. Her mother jabbed the fourth-floor button a few times and tapped her foot. The lift clunked and juddered as it started up again.

'I don't like him,' said Jess.

'He's perfectly nice.'

'He's nice to you. He talks to me like I'm an idiot,'

'He talks to you like you're a child.'

'Exactly.'

'He's a very good doctor.'

'How do you know? You don't have medical training.'

Game, set and match, Jess thought.

'Put your goggles back on,' said her mother. 'There are windows in the corridor.'

'But, Mum . . .' she started.

'Jessica,' her mother replied, firmly. Game, set and match.